14.1(English) 1(Marathi). Garuda Purana is said to be one of the oldest purana's in existence. It narrates the story of Vishnu's, in the form of an eagle, making an attempt to rescue his mother Yajna from Devas and the asura king of darkness, Durda who was planning to burn her. The whole story of Garuda, Lord Vishnu and Durda is told in Garuda Purana. "Garuda Purana is attributed to the story of Garuda, a bird, who attempted to pull the Agni, the Vedic god of fire, away from the Asuras who sought to destroy him. In the Vishnu Purana, Garuda is a celestial bird that serves as the vehicle of Vishnu in the form of an eagle. He is the son of Shiva and Sati, and is considered one of the avatars of Vishnu. The Garuda Purana is considered to be one of the more recent of the many puranas, if not the oldest. It has been dated back to the 1st or 2nd century AD. The Garuda Purana has not yet been translated into English. The Garuda Purana is the first epic in Sanskrit language in the world. The Garuda Purana was compiled by sage Markandeya around the 7th century AD. A detailed account of the legend of Garuda can be found in the Markandeya Purana, in Sanskrit. In the Markandeya Purana there is a different story of Garuda, the son of Shiva and Sati, which is quite different from the one that is in the Garuda Purana. According to the Markandeya Purana story, after the fight between Vishnu, Shiva and Brahma, Shiva goes to Mount Mahendra to meditate. There he discovers that his wife Sati is dying. He then separates from Sati, and goes to a cave where Sati meets her old servant, who is actually a serpent and the Asura Kinkaraka, the serpent king of serpents. Sati asks the serpent king f678ea9f9e
